

1. Specialized language courses

Certainly many people are familiar with the book by Norman Davis on Polish history. Reading this book, we admire his knowledge of Polish history and analytical skills. None of us wonder how much work had to be put to research Polish history, but also to learn Polish. Indeed, without the knowledge of Polish language, the author would not have the opportunity to base his research on primary sources.

„I am very satisfied with SCHOLA POLONICA. This is a proper school, with great tradition, working from its own premises and has a pool of excellent teachers regularly working in the school. On 8 September, the day I switched to Schola Polonica, I had an interview in Polish with Ms Anna Pomykallo, the director of the school, to determine the objectives of my course with them. As of the following day, I was entrusted to three different teachers (on most days I had classes with two of them, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon. The course with them was very well structured, with grammar and conversation units that enabled me to extend my vocabulary and confidence in oral communication. I also appreciated the reading unit during which we studied texts relating to the EU and Poland's accession. The three teachers were professionally and personally impeccable and I feel that they fully reached the objectives which had been set for my course.

I can certainly recommend Schola Polonica"
